With the election of Bill Clinton in 1992, Washington became the capital of the 1990s sexual revolution. The revolution's blindness to la différence also created a little-understood dilemma for young, single women now leading the charge. By ignoring the truth that females across cultures and species are "choosier" than males about sexual partners and by proclaiming sexual self-expression as the primo value for all enlightened people, it weakened social support for those women who ...
