In economics, goods are items that satisfy human wants and provide utility, for example, to a consumer making a purchase of a satisfying product. A common distinction is made between goods which are transferable, and services, which are not transferable.. A good is an "economic good" if it is useful to people but scarce in relation to its demand so that human effort is required to obtain it.

1. Matt Yglesias made a very wise observation: To me, one of the big takeaways from this pandemic has been that in a genuinely novel situation where you need to make decisions based on imperfect evidence, listening to smart generalists has been more useful than listening to credentialed subject matter experts. That's also my impression.
